

ZURA Website Brief

For: [friend's name] — building full site replacement in Claude From: ZURA (Morocco Trade Group LLC)

What ZURA Is

Clinical-grade, single-ingredient Moroccan argan oil sold to aesthetic and corrective clinics (med spas, dermatologists, estheticians) — and now, in a limited way, direct to consumers who want the same product. One SKU: 50ml airless pump. Cold-pressed, lab-tested, batch-traceable, ISO 22716 (GMP) certified production, certified Moroccan origin.

The brand exists in contrast to mass-market argan oil, which is typically overprocessed, oxidized before it reaches shelves, and sold with no certificates of analysis or traceability. ZURA's entire pitch is transparency and clinical performance over beauty-industry marketing.

Audience (in priority order)

1. Aesthetic/corrective clinic owners (primary) — arriving via in-person pitch, referral, or a physical card. They're checking credibility, not browsing.
2. Individual consumers (new, secondary) — small volume test audience for a direct retail purchase option. Not the main growth driver yet.

Design Direction

Minimal clinical. Think lab report, not candle brand. Restrained typography (a clean sans-serif, maybe one serif for headlines if it doesn't feel decorative), generous white space, near-monochrome palette (black/white/warm off-white) with a single accent color used sparingly — could pull from the amber/gold of the oil itself. No stock "beauty" imagery, no soft pastel gradients, no influencer-style photography. If icons are used, keep them geometric/line-based, not illustrative.

Reference points: The Ordinary, Necessaire, or a well-designed medical device or lab supply site.

Site Structure

1. Hero

- ZURA wordmark
- One-line positioning: clinical-grade Moroccan argan oil for corrective professionals
- Two CTAs, clearly weighted differently: "Apply for Wholesale Access" (primary) and "Shop Retail" (secondary, smaller)

2. Not All Argan Oil Is Equal

- Short comparison: what's wrong with typical clinic-sold argan oil vs. what ZURA does differently (existing copy already covers this well)

3. Where It Fits (protocol use cases)

- Post-peel barrier support, post-microneedling calming layer, compromised barrier recovery, acne-safe hydration, professional retail add-on
- Keep as a scannable list, not paragraphs

4. Clinical Standards & Traceability

- ISO 22716 certification, batch-level COAs, certified Moroccan origin, U.S. cosmetic compliance
- Ideally: an actual COA image/example here, even blurred/sample, for credibility

5. Product Section

- One SKU: 50ml airless pump
- Real product photography (not stock)
- Retail price: $60 flat. Wholesale sheets tell clinics to retail between $55-60, so $60 keeps the direct site at the top of that range and avoids undercutting clinic partners. Do not display wholesale tier pricing publicly.

6. Wholesale CTA

- "Apply for Wholesale Access" — should lead to a real form or direct contact, not a dead end
- Brief note on resale margins / clinic partnership without giving away exact tier pricing

7. Footer

- Contact, shipping/returns policy links, legal

Copy Rules (carry over from existing brand voice)

- No em dashes
- No overclaiming — say “recovers,” not “heals”
- Punchy, minimal, clinical tone throughout

Commerce Requirements

- Retail checkout: Stripe payment link (already in use for wholesale, same approach at retail pricing) — no need for full Shopify/cart infrastructure at this stage
- Wholesale tiers stay off the public page — routed through the application/contact flow instead

Notes

- No sample/trial size — 50ml is the only consumer offering
- Retail price finalized at $60
- Domain: replacing zura.beauty directly, so DNS/hosting handoff from Carrd needs to happen at launch
